A man at his damaged house in central Philippines on Monday
REUTERS

Path through the Philippines

Official death estimates are still being compiled following Super Typhoon Haiyan's direct hit on the Philippines, but an estimated 9.5 million people in the country have been impacted by the storm, with some 650,000 displaced.

U.S. aid on the way as officials fear Philippines death toll will skyrocket

Reuters

TACLOBAN, Philippines Rescue workers tried to reach towns and villages in the central Philippines on Tuesday that were cut off by a powerful typhoon, fearing the estimated death toll of 10,000 could jump sharply, as relief efforts intensified with the help of U.S. military.

The United States will send an aircraft carrier, the USS George Washington, to the Philippines, a U.S. defense official told Reuters, in a move that could further scale up air operations at a time when ground teams are struggling to reach areas where roads are impassable and bridges destroyed.

The carrier already is in the region, having been on a port visit to Hong Kong.

Officials in Tacloban, which bore the brunt of one of the strongest storms ever recorded when it slammed into the Philippines on Friday, have said the death toll could be 10,000 in their city alone.

Compounding the misery for survivors, a depression is due to bring rain to the central and southern Philippines on Tuesday, the weather bureau said.

"I think what worries us the most is that there are so many areas where we have no information from, and when we have this silence, it usually means the damage is even worse," said Joseph Curry of the U.S. organization Catholic Relief Services.

The "sheer size of the emergency" in the wake of the typhoon was testing relief efforts, he told NBC's "Today" on Monday, speaking from Manila.

John Ging, director of operations at the U.N. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, said "many places are strewn with dead bodies" that need to be buried quickly to prevent the outbreak of a public health disaster.

"We're sadly expecting the worst as we get more and more access," said Ging, speaking to reporters at the United Nations in New York.

President Benigno Aquino declared a state of national calamity and deployed hundreds of soldiers in Tacloban to quell looting. Tacloban's administration appeared to be in disarray as city and hospital workers focused on saving their own families and securing food.

Reuters journalists traveled into the city on a government aid truck that was guarded by soldiers with assault rifles.

"It's risky," said Jewel Ray Marcia, an army lieutenant. "People are angry. They are going out of their minds."

Ventra fails have a new app

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

 tschwartz@tribune.com
 @tracyswartz

Fed up with the multiple taps it took for his Ventra card to work, Michael Askew turned his problematic taps into a problem app.

Askew, 35, this month created an app for iPhones called "Ventra Fails." CTA riders can record when and where their Ventra cards fail.

The CTA announced last week it is slowing its transition to Ventra, a new fare payment system, while system operator Cubic works out glitches that have ranged from long customer service waits to delayed mailings of cards to slow processing time once a Ventra card has been tapped.

Askew, a Northeastern Illinois University marketing student, said he's been using his Ventra U-Pass for about a month and has found that sometimes it has taken the card multiple taps to board a bus or train. The Edgewater resident said he's also been waiting a while for a Ventra card to replace the Chicago Card he also carries.

He wanted to create a system to record these problems, much like the 311 system the city has developed for reporting potholes.

"Maybe the voices of hundreds could come together in a way," Askew said. "It's not like you just have to grin and bear it."

He said 100 people have downloaded the free app, the only of its kind in the iTunes store, and more than 25 complaints have been logged.

Askew, who also works as a senior interactive developer at 88 Brand Partners, a Loop advertising firm, said it took him about 10 days to create this app. He plans on updating the app soon and would like to expand it to other smartphones besides iPhones.

Friday was supposed to be the deadline for Chicago Card users to transition to Ventra, but that was jettisoned last week when the CTA announced it is allowing all fare card holders to use their current cards indefinitely while Ventra glitches are worked out.

As of late last week, Ventra was used to pay for 60 percent of all CTA rides, the agency said.

Celebrate X-Mass Transit

"EL Stories: Holiday Train," a play that incorporates real-life CTA stories, will run Saturdays at 11 p.m. from Nov. 30 to Jan. 11 at the Greenhouse Theater Center, 2257 N. Lincoln Ave. Tickets are $20. Go to waltzingmechanics.org for more information.

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note
This week: Jarvis Red Line

It's been a year since this Rogers Park station was closed for six weeks as part of a North Side Red Line project to beautify and repair seven stations. The CTA put in new windows, doors and lights on the stationhouse and made various improvements to the adjacent viaduct. But station ridership has yet to rebound after the closure, according to data through July.

Jarvis ridership was down 6.4 percent to nearly 292,000 riders from January through July compared to the same period in 2012. Weekday ridership was down 16.8 percent in July to 1,594 riders. Systemwide, CTA rail ridership is down 15 percent this year. Perhaps part of the reason of the Jarvis decline is the persistence of slow zones on the North Side of the Red Line. Nearly 14 percent of that section of the Red Line is plagued by slow zones, including near Jarvis. Next up: Noyes Purple Line.

NUMBERS GAME

Reuters

Fewer than 50,000 Americans were able to sign up for new Obamacare health insurance plans through the error-plagued healthcare.gov website serving 36 states, falling far short of the federal government's target, the Wall Street Journal reported Monday.

Citing two people familiar with the matter, the Journal reported that the number represented sign-ups since the Oct. 1 launch of new insurance marketplaces under President Obama's health care reform.

"We cannot confirm these numbers," said Erin Shields Britt, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, in a statement. "More generally we have always anticipated that initial enrollment numbers would be low and increase over time."

If accurate, the numbers fall far short of government expectations for nearly 500,000 sign-ups in October.

The Obama administration is due to release national enrollment numbers sometime this week.

Tech tailored for women

Wouldn't it be cool to be able to charge your dying cellphone simply by putting it in your clutch purse?

Liz Salcedo, 28, created Everpurse in River North because she never remembered to charge her phone and didn't like carrying extra batteries. The purse, available in fabric or leather, charges when placed on its charging mat.

In just six days last fall, Everpurse reached the $100,000 goal of its Kickstarter campaign. She ended up raising $238,000 in a month.

Even though the purse is in high demand—2,000 orders were shipped this summer—Salcedo said her company has been dismissed a couple of times by male journalists, leaving her with the impression that her product isn't worth writing about because it's just a product for women.

Other entrepreneurs have said getting investors on board is another obstacle facing startups. It can be particularly challenging when there seems to be a disconnect among men who may not understand a product that targets female consumers.

Salcedo has even gotten some unexpected pushback. "Interestingly, I have had a lot of men say, 'What about me?'" she said. "Most tech products are designed for men. I thought, 'How cool is it that I'm designing a tech product for women?'" L.V.

THE TECH FIELD IS FAR FROM LEVEL

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Creating a successful startup is an impressive feat for anyone, man or woman.

Coco Meers, who created beauty appointment booking site prettyquick.com, is living proof. While she is proud to be a female founder, she doesn't want to be acclaimed solely for her gender.

"I want to be recognized by the community as a founder of a great business first and foremost," said Meers, 31, a Top 3 finalist for coolest startup in Chicago. "It's not about, 'Oh my God, it's a female founder.' Those founders need to be judged on the same basis as any other founder would be, need to be addressed as any other founder would be, which is with respect and candid discussion about their business."

Chicago's thriving tech scene has made strides toward gender equality with more women taking the leap, starting companies and creating supportive networks. Yet women in the male-dominated industry have suffered setbacks, adding another hurdle to the list of challenges that entrepreneurs encounter.

Still, many have found Chicago a welcoming place for their ventures into the tech world.

In its first year, 28 percent of the nearly 225 businesses at Chicago startup community 1871 had a female on their founding team, said Melissa Lederer, chief marketing officer for the Merchandise Mart startup space. In her estimation, that number is "pretty good."

"We have, in my opinion, an incredible group of female entrepreneurs at 1871 who have really worked hard to gain credibility, build businesses and talk to capital investment firms and got capital," Lederer said.

"I think we're doing OK here, but I think we can do a lot better," said Kevin Willer, formerly CEO of Chicagoland Entrepreneurial Center and currently partner at Chicago Ventures, a venture capital firm.

"The challenge we have in Chicago: We just need to build successful companies here," he said.

"Chicago's tech community is very embracing of everybody who wants to be a part of that," Willer said.

Still, women are underrepresented nationally when it comes to the science, technology, engineering and math fields, according to a U.S. Census report released in September. Women accounted for 26 percent of the 7.2 million workers in those jobs in 2011. The representation of women has increased over the years, but that growth has slowed and women are in the minority, particularly in engineering and computer jobs. For example, the share of women in computer occupations went from 15 percent in 1970 to a high of 34 percent in 1990 to 27 percent in 2011, the report said.

When it comes to the state of women in the tech field, there have been bumps in the road.

At a Technori Pitch event in Chicago in September, two men referred to female presenters as "hot girls in yoga pants." The chief technology officer for Business Insider lost his job after sending out sexist tweets. And an app presented at TechCrunch Disrupt in San Francisco focused on photos of people staring at breasts.

Three years ago Melissa Pierce went to an open hack night wanting to know how to fix a problem on her WordPress site. A man chuckled and said there was "no room for noobs with boobs."

"It didn't take me very long to get angry and organize something," Pierce said. She formed a group called Chicago Women Developers. About 10 women showed up to the first meetup and it has since blown up.

"There are 900 women in Chicago working in tech or really interested to work in tech and feel they need a safe space; and that tells you something about the tech climate," Pierce, 37, said.

She has noticed more people, including men, calling out on social media what they see as unacceptable, such as the Crain's Tech 50 list that came out in September. It included only nine women, including Pierce and Meers. The list also singled out Pierce as a parent and included a "wise men" category, to which some people tweeted their disapproval.

Meanwhile, activists continue to help break down barriers and encourage more women to enter the tech field with local organizations and initiatives, hacking events that target females and national campaigns such as Change the Ratio aimed at increasing the visibility and representation of women in tech and new media.

In addition to Chicago Women Developers, a number of groups create support networks that aim to inspire and foster a community for women in tech, including Ms. Tech; the informal group "Ladies Who Lunch," which meets weekly at 1871; and the quarterly "Women Who Launch," when female entrepreneurs meet with city officials to support women-owned digital startups.

"I think our generation of women is going to make a huge splash in tech, in business and in entrepreneurship in Chicago," said Amanda Yang, 27, data analyst and founder of Clear the Path, an e-commerce site that sells athletic apparel for female cyclists that can be worn at work after commuting. "I feel like the reason that we are going to succeed is because we're not being catty to each other. ... We're just really all coming together and building something cool, which is a bunch of ladies trying to make their business dreams happen."

LIVANCO@TRIBUNE.COM | @LVIVANCO

Tech support

Shradha Agarwal, 28, is co-founder of ContextMedia, a Loop-based health care media company that informs and educates patients on specific conditions while in physician and hospital waiting rooms.

RedEye talked to Agarwal, who recently won the Tech Woman of the Year at Chicago's annual Moxie Awards ceremony.

On encouraging more women to enter the tech world: "In the short term, women need to build a stronger sense of community to support each other but also share with others each others' accomplishments. Simultaneously, we need to have these amazing women share their personal story with young girls to serve as role models and show them that women can be in tech and do so successfully."

On what business advice you'd give: "It's OK to make mistakes. It's OK to not have all the answers." LV.

"We're just really all coming together and building something cool, which is a bunch of ladies trying to make their business dreams happen."

Charlie Trotter's memorial service at Chicago Presbyterian Church on Monday included many famous chefs. NANCY STONE/TRIBUNE

Trotter remembered as mentor figure

Chicago Tribune

As she looked across the packed pews liberally sprinkled with chefs in their whites, the sister of Charlie Trotter reflected on how her celebrated brother had touched so many lives.

"Charlie used to say that he raised my brothers and me," Anne Trotter Hinkamp said at a memorial service Monday at Fourth Presbyterian Church. "I don't think it'd be too far for me to say he raised many others in this room as well."

Trotter made a name for himself shortly after opening his restaurant in a converted house on Armitage Avenue in 1987. As his fame grew, he created the Charlie Trotter Culinary Education Foundation to provide scholarships for culinary students. Trotter was found dead in his Lincoln Park home last week at the age of 54.

His sister shared stories that reflected Trotter's hardworking and independent ways, stirring a laugh from the crowd when she recalled her older brother's first words to her when she was born: "Baby Anne, get up!"

Her brother struggled to teach himself to read and did not learn until college that he had dyslexia, Trotter Hinkamp said. That experience helped found his deep belief that if someone worked hard enough, he or she could accomplish anything, she said. He had a heart for those in need, she said, and he loved his wife and his son deeply.

As the Rev. Sarah Sarchet Butter noted in her address, questions remain about Trotter's death. "Faith does not erase our grief or our questions," she said, "grief at the premature loss of one so talented."

Trotter's autopsy was inconclusive, and officials said they will conduct other tests to determine how the celebrated chef died. The Cook County medical examiner's office said the additional tests will include a toxicology analysis, and the results could take six and eight weeks.

'60 Minutes' apologizes for discredited report

'60 Minutes' briefly apologized Sunday night for its discredited Oct. 27 report on the attack on the American Special Mission in Benghazi, Libya, but did not go into detail about the reporting errors that led to it. Correspondent Lara Logan issued an apology and correction for the politically charged story.

U.S. bishops to choose new leaders this week

1 U.S. Catholic bishops will choose new leaders at an assembly in Baltimore this week and possibly signal a new direction for the American church under the influence of Pope Francis. All eyes will be on whether the new leaders of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops continue vigorous opposition to gay marriage and to Obamacare's contraceptive mandate, or increase their push to help the poor and immigrants given Pope Francis' emphasis on social justice issues.

Record number of foreign students in U.S.

2 More than 800,000 international students studied at U.S. colleges and universities last year, a record high fueled largely by an influx of young scholars from China, U.S. data released on Monday showed. That is a 7 percent increase—or 55,000 students—from the 2011 academic year.

Morsi's detention extended 30 days

3 A court on Monday extended the detention of Egypt's deposed president Mohammed Morsi for 30 days while prosecutors investigate charges stemming from a 2011 prison break by the Islamist leader and other members of his Muslim Brotherhood movement.

3 band members dead after murder-suicide

4 A man shot dead three people and wounded a fourth before killing himself in a shooting spree in Brooklyn, N.Y., police said Monday. The gunman was a musician who killed his bandmates and then himself, according to local media reports. The gunman was angry at being thrown out of the band, the newspapers said.

Target, Toys R Us to open on Thanksgiving

At this rate, shoppers hoping to get in on "Black Friday" deals will have to eat their turkey for lunch, as Target and Toys R Us announced plans to open Thanksgiving evening.

In its earliest opening ever, Target said it will welcome bargain hunters at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 28, joining a veritable stampede of retailers, including Macy's, J.C. Penney and Staples.

Target said most stores will stay open until 11 p.m. Friday and will stay open for at least 14 hours on Christmas Eve and 15 hours the day after Christmas.

As for the employees running the holiday shift, Target said it "works closely with its team members to understand scheduling preferences" and pays such workers time and a half.

In an ultracompetitive holiday season that can account for 40 percent of a retailer's annual revenue, some chains aren't even waiting out Thanksgiving dinner.

Toys R Us said Monday that shoppers can come in from 5 p.m. Nov. 28 until 10 p.m. Nov. 29.

Best Buy said last week that most of its stores will be operational at 6 p.m. on the holiday; Kmart's 41-hour Black Friday marathon will start at 6 a.m. Thanksgiving morning.

Target and Toys R Us are also taking cues from Wal-Mart, which started offering Black Friday deals online in early November.

Target will host 15 online-only daily deals in the two weeks starting Nov. 24. Toys R Us rewards club members can get exclusive access to some discounts Nov. 27. The toy retailer also said it will preview its Black Friday ad Nov. 24 on Facebook.

And for the first time, Toys R Us customers can go online to shop most of the bargains just past midnight on Thanksgiving.

Return of the King

Jaw-dropping ability: Check.
Prep titles: Check. Now Jabari is conquering Duke

By Bryan Crawford
FOR REDEYE

Jabari Parker will go down in Chicago Public League history as the first player from the city to lead his team to four consecutive state championships. That's no small feat, especially when you consider the talent level in the city and across the state.

Even coming from Simeon, the high school that produced Ben Wilson, Nick Anderson, Bobby Simmons and Derrick Rose, many have placed Parker in the conversation as the best player Chicago has ever produced.

Those state titles, being a two-time Illinois Mr. Basketball and making the cover of Sports Illustrated are enough for a persuasive argument. But Parker leaves his place among this city's prep basketball elite for others to hash out, choosing instead to focus on getting better at his craft.

"I accomplished everything I wanted to accomplish at Simeon," Parker said. "I wouldn't change a thing. Now it's on to the next challenge."

That challenge comes in the form of his freshman year at Duke, which always has national championship aspirations. The Blue Devils play Kansas at the United Center on Tuesday in the State Farm Champions Classic.

Preparing for college came with its trials, however. Before his senior year at Simeon, Parker was forced off the court for five months with a stress fracture in his foot. Once he came back, he was 20 pounds overweight and his timing and feel for the game were off. The experience challenged him on several levels.

"Sitting out because of my foot injury and then not being able to pick right back up where I left off once I started playing again was tough for me mentally," he said. "But looking back, I also feel like it was necessary for me to go through that because it helped me to rebuild my confidence in myself, my game, and I think it made me a better player."

DON'T LEAVE HOME WITHOUT ...

Every college student has a list of things to take with them to remind themselves of home. RedEye asked hoops phenom Jabari Parker for his five must-have items. E.C.

1. Bible

"I have to take my Bible with me. I read it on every trip I take and it just helps to keep me centered and focused."

2. Simeon memorabilia

"I'm going to take a couple pairs of shoes I wore at Simeon and also my practice shorts, just as a reminder of where I came from."

3. Air Jordan IIIs

"These are old-school. Like, my favorite pair of Jordans of all time."

4. 'American Gangster' soundtrack

"That album right there is a classic. Jay Z is one of my favorite artists."

“THEY WERE ALL GREAT COACHES AND GREAT SCHOOLS AND I DIDN'T KNOW HOW TO TELL THE OTHER FOUR THAT I MADE A DECISION TO GO SOMEPLACE ELSE.”

—Jabari Parker, on choosing to go to Duke over Florida, Michigan State, Stanford and BYU

And in the midst of trying to get his game and his body back together, Parker had another issue on his mind: Which college to choose? His decision came down to Duke, Florida, Michigan State, Stanford and BYU before settling on becoming a Blue Devil.

“It was tough to make that decision,” Parker said. “I didn’t want to let any of those coaches down who were recruiting me. They were all great coaches and great schools and I didn’t know how to tell the other four that I made a decision to go someplace else.”

Once the decision was made, Parker said it felt as if a weight had been lifted off his shoulders, and it began to manifest itself on the court as the ease and smoothness with which he played the game started to come back.

His improvement and the versatility of his game were on full display during his senior year, and on the high school all-star game circuit.

Now he’s starting over again at Duke. In his debut against Davidson on Friday, Parker had 22 points on 8-of-10 shooting and grabbed six rebounds. Nothing to sneeze at.

And fortunately for Parker, he’s suiting up for a coach who has Chicago roots—Mike Krzyzewski—who will do whatever he can to help him add to his already impressive basketball resume.

“He has a huge growth process to go through,” Krzyzewski said. “He’s not a finished product, but he’s a good product. If he’s healthy, he’s going to keep getting better. He’s coachable. He’s a good kid. He doesn’t have any demons.”

1	Jay Cutler's injured groin + Jay Cutler's injured ankle = ____	A few very easy days for sports talk radio producers.	Time to learn how to spell "McCown."	The square root of the Josh McCown era!	Music to McCown's ears!	Josh McCown fan club.
2	What's the secret to the Blackhawks' flourishing offense?	Winnipeg, Dallas and Edmonton.	Shooting whenever fans tell them to.	Hustle, teamwork and a gluten-free diet. #evenimost	All those leftovers from the "moms" hockey trip. Those beauties do well with a little TLC from good ol' Mom!	Putting that black hockey ball in that net thingy.
3	Why is Carlos Boozer shooting so well to start the season?	No more spray-on hair dripping in his eyes.	The laws of physics have stopped applying.	I deleted those texts from Richie Incognito before he could see them.	Unlike Derrick Rose, Boozer used his CLR rust remover in the offseason. Smart thinking, Carlos!	There are a lot of easy baskets off all of those D-Rose misses.
4	Fining a fan for throwing a football during a tailgate is like...	... not fining that same fan hours later for public intoxication.	... probably for the best if you've ever been to a tailgate.	... fining a Detroit fan for showing their ignorance during an anything.	... fining Chicagoans for holding dibs with lawn chairs in parking spots after a big snowfall.	... charging full price for NFL preseason games.
5	When will Illinois football win another Big Ten game?	HireRonZook.com.	Illinotsoon.	On or after it becomes the Big 20.	About the same time that I hon-ey-moon at the Sybaris.	When the Big Ten actually has 10 teams.

Charles Tillman
CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE

Peanut done for the year

Bears cornerback Charles "Peanut" Tillman is done for the rest of the regular season because of a triceps injury suffered Sunday.

The Bears have placed Tillman on injured reserve with designation to return. With that designation, he cannot practice for the next six weeks and is not eligible to play for eight weeks.

That means the only way the 32-year-old cornerback will play again this season is if the Bears reach the playoffs.

"It hurts; I'm definitely sad," Tillman said. "This team has a lot of potential. We have a lot of potential. And the fact that I'm no longer part of that to help this team to try and succeed, that's the part that hurts. But my role right now is just to be the biggest cheerleader and supporter I can."

Asked whether surgery was needed, Tillman

CUTLER'S OUT, TOO

Bears quarterback Jay Cutler has a high ankle sprain and won't play Sunday against Baltimore at Soldier Field, coach Marc Trestman said Monday. Josh McCown will start against the Ravens, Trestman said. Cutler's status is considered "week-to-week," and Trestman said it "certainly won't be this week."

said, "As of right now, no. The injury is still kind of being diagnosed. [Seeking] a second opinion. So I'm still kind of having it being evaluated."

Tillman is the fourth defensive player to land on injured reserve in the past two months, joining Henry Melton (knee), Nate Collins (knee) and DJ Williams (pectoral tear).

He's Mr. Helpful

Patrick Sharp has been on fire, and the NHL has noticed. On Monday, he was named the league's Third Star for the week ending Nov. 10 after piling up a goal and six assists during three Blackhawks victories.

Bulls 96, Cleveland 81

Derrick Rose finished with 16 points, a season-high seven assists and zero turnovers Monday to lead the Bulls over Cleveland at the United Center. But in the final minutes, team personnel worked on Rose's right leg (NOT his surgically repaired left knee). After the game, coach Tom Thibodeau said Rose had a minor hamstring injury.

THE FINISH LINE

SNAP JUDGMENT: LADY GAGA

KEEPING YOU PLUGGED IN TO TODAY'S MOST BUZZWORTHY MUSIC

By Matt Pals

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

I'm not a Lady Gaga fan. Let's just put that on the record.

Lately, though, it doesn't seem like many Little Monsters care much about the pop star's new "Artpop" either, if the album's apparent lack of buzz is any indication. Maybe people have tired of the intense message-peddling that makes Gaga seem like a product rather than a sincere icon for self-esteem and community. Or maybe that's just in my head. So let's keep that going as I share what's going through my head as I listen to Gaga's new record. I give each track a chance, I promise.

'Aura'

Is this acoustic guitar supposed to be the soundtrack to her minor turn in "Machete

Artpop
Lady Gaga

Kills? Did she say, "I killed my farmer?"

Forget the acoustic guitar; now it's a pounding dance track. "Do you want to see me naked, lover?" Why would your lover say no? The heavy production reminds me of Justice. You can't just write a chorus and call it a confession.

'Venus'

This sounds like being on another planet, which works. Here's the terrible, weird singing. Intense drums are an improvement. "When you touch me I die just a little inside; I wonder if this could be love." Probably not with the whole "little death" thing. I support the dance-y, percussive refrain of "Take me to your planet" but she's not actually singing about anything. She mentions other planets; after Uranus she belts, "Don't you know my ass is famous?" Yes, unfortunately.

'Sexxx Dreams'

This sounds like an intense trek down a dark hallway: "I can't help my mind from going there." I know "When I lay in bed I touch myself and think of you." Ooh. This is the album's first effective use of an '80s sound. Gaga's delivery is breathy and features actual singing without pushing too hard. This is the best/only tolerable song so far. Can't hear the second and third x in the title.

'ARTPOP'

More space beeping. Where's Beaker from the Muppets? I want to make beeping noises along with it. "My artpop could mean anything." If you mean anything, you mean nothing. Who decided that these sounds worked well together? Are there lasers in this room? Is someone sitting on a keyboard? Is Gaga running in place while singing?

Canada's favorite sexy man is celebrating the big 33—so what are you getting him?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Dahling, you don't look a day over 28. Ryan Gosling celebrates his 33rd birthday Tuesday, and while his friends and family are sure to get him some thoughtful gifts, rabid fans probably want to get in on the action too. (JK, only the ones who also are rabid stalkers.) To help them in their quest toward a restraining order, we've compiled a list of thoughtful presents to get the Gos, based on his movies.

NICOTINE PATCHES

Let's be honest here, while his "Blue Valentine" character Dean started off smokin' hot, his smokin' was just gross by the end of the movie. He could use a little help to get back on track.

LEATHER DRIVING GLOVES

When avoiding a sticky situation in "Drive," it's extra-important to have a strong grip on the wheel. These also look excellent when you're just walking around cracking your knuckles.

GIFT CERTIFICATE TO HUGO BOSS

We wouldn't presume to know exactly what his "Crazy, Stupid, Love." character Jacob would pick out, so we'll let this stylish cat decide for himself.

DVD COPY OF 'REMEMBER THE TITANS'

Yes, he's in this, but it's only a bit part, and this movie is so damn good that everyone deserves a copy. The locker-room singing! The overcoming of racial biases! Hayden Panettiere as a tiny child!

BLOW-UP DOLL

Obvi. Longtime rumor has it that Gosling took his rubberized "Lars and the Real Girl" co-star home with him, but he's probably due for a new one by now.

STATIONERY SET

He must be out after writing a letter to Allie every damn day in "The Notebook."

Happy birthday,
Mr. Gosling

BIG FINISH 2013

PUT ON YOUR SUIT AND TIE:

Justin Timberlake will perform at the American Music Awards. Dick Clark Productions announced Monday. Timberlake, who is nominated for five awards, will join acts such as Lady Gaga, Psy, Kelly Clarkson and Miley Cyrus. Pitbull is hosting the Nov. 24 ceremony.

Inconceivable!

"Hello. My name is Inigo Montoya. You killed my father. Prepare to die." That. Over and over. Yes, Disney is turning "The Princess Bride" into a stage show, latimes.com reports. No dates or cities have been announced for the planned production, but we're holding out hope for some Chicago love.

Gaga's dark reveal

Well, this might explain why Lady Gaga admitted to eating deep-dish pizza in the bathroom last week. The Mother Monster revealed Monday on New York's Z100 Morning Show that she is battling marijuana addiction, people.com reports. "It's ultimately related to anxiety coping and it's a form of self-medication," she said, according to the gossip site.

THE DIGIT

5 PBS announced Monday it has renewed the hit "Downton Abbey" for a fifth season, even though Season 4 won't begin until Jan. 5 on the U.S. network.

Light it up

Even in Europe, Miley's just bein' Miley. In a nod to the host city's famously tolerant attitude toward marijuana, Cyrus lit what looked like a joint Sunday at the MTV European Music Awards in Amsterdam. Edgy!

“ If you're famous, I don't—for the life of me—I don't understand why any famous person would ever be on Twitter. **”

—George Clooney, to Esquire magazine, on how "all the things you might think in the quiet of your drunken evening" could end a career with one miscalculated tweet
